

MISS ZIMMERMAN LOVED THE DUKE.

His Title Held No Special Attraction For the Girl.

AS VIEWED IN NEW YORK

This Young American Woman Has Enough Money to Buy a Dozen Coronets—Will Inherit Millions.

New York, Nov. 21.—Concerning the marriage of the Duke of Manchester to Miss Zimmerman, of Cincinnati, the Journal publishes the following:

"The young American woman, Helena Zimmerman, who could buy a dozen titles, but who marries for love, is the daughter of Eugene Zimmerman, of Cincinnati, vice president of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad company.

"His wealth is estimated from $8,000,000 to $15,000,000, which the young duchess, the only child, will inherit—it she placates him, and she is the apple of his eye.

"The duchess is scarcely more than 21 year old, a beautiful girl, with golden hair.

"From her mother's side Helena Zimmerman gets the dogged strain of the Scot and the fire of the French Huguenot. Her great grandfather on her mother's side was Squire Igon. From her mother's side, too, she gets her love of literature. Here the lines run back to George Eliot.

"George Eliot's mother was a Pearson. She married Robert Evans. George Eliot's name was Mary Anne Evans. Abraham Evans, the father of Helena's mother, was Robert Evans's first cousin.

"Born to great wealth, with all her desires gratified, all her wants studied, small wonder that Helena Zimmerman grew up a self-willed, masterful, rebellious girl. Yet her natural sweetness made her loved wherever she went. She accepted the world as made for her. No pains were spared on her education. Her mother died when she was but 12 years old, and since then she has been under the care of her Aunt Helena, who was her godmother.

HOW THEY MET.

"It was at Dinard, in Brittany, at the costume ball given by Mrs. Hughes Haelett, who was Miss Emily Schauberg, of Philadelphia, that Miss Zimmerman was attracted as the belle of New York, representing Edna May. As she came down the broad staircase, the orchestra struck up airs from the score of the piece. At the moment she entered the room Manchester entered from another door in pink flannels and a bathrobe, representing a bathman. The daring conceit struck the company as being beyond the bounds of propriety, and the duke was asked to retire by the committee. The entry, however, had been made. The two had been face to face.

"And the duke did not forget. He was presented to Miss Evans, the aunt of Miss Zimmerman, and made himself so fascinating that he was given the entrée to their house in Paris. There later in the season the two young people were much together, and the duke pressed his love-making with ardor. Their mutual fascination was the theme of much pleasant gossip.

"It was noticed that Miss Zimmerman, instead of referring to him by his own intimate name, habitually called him 'Gracie.' No one could guess why, but at last Mrs. Brown Potter gave the clue to the riddle.

"Before Miss Zimmerman left the capital Manchester had proposed to her. With her usual originality she declined the engagement ring he proffered.

"What sort of a ring shall I bring you?" he asked.

"A dog fancier had spread his wares on the corner and she appropriated the carriage.

"Give me this," she said, laying her hand on a bull pup. And the bull pup it had to be. She named her novel engagement token Bess, and the two became inseparable.

A LOVERS' QUARREL.

There was a lover's quarrel before Miss Zimmerman left Paris—not serious, but it remained. She came to her native land, went to Narragansett Pier, letters did not come, and the duke determined to follow her to America.

Carl Johnson, cousin to Lord Anglessey, prevailed upon the duke to take him to this side as his secretary. Johnson alleged that he was in love with an American girl, and the duke being in love himself, agreed.

The fact which Carl Johnson did not think it necessary to tell Manchester was that the American girl in question was Miss Zimmerman herself.

Here were all the elements of a romance within a romance. The duke watched Miss Zimmerman. Johnson watched the duke. The girl coquetted. When the moment seemed ripe Johnson informed Manchester that Miss Zimmerman had become engaged to a sailor in the west. The duke believed him and went back to England.

Here he unbundled his woes to Mrs. James Brown Potter, who saw through the plot and assured him the story was not true. Hearing that Miss Evans was in Paris, Manchester hurried thither, and through Miss Evans sent his proposal for Miss Helena's hand to her father. The announcement of their engagement soon followed. That they were engaged had been denied and reaffirmed a dozen times. The duke's grandmother, Mrs. Yanaga, advised that the duchess's father denied it, she herself denied it last July. There were rumors of her engagement to Isaac M. Jordan, of Cincinnati.

Now she is the duchess of Manchester.

Angus Drogo Montague, Duke of Manchester, is the ninth holder of the title. He comes of an historic family. His ancestor, Lord Kimbolton, afterward Earl of Manchester, played a big part on the stage of English history as a great parliamentary general in the civil war.

The present duke is 23 years old and a Londoner. He is the son of the eighth duke and of Consuelo, daughter of Signor Youngs de Yelle at Manchester.

La., so that he is not entirely of English blood.

Just a year ago he had the honor to join the Journal's staff, and he reported the horse show for the newspaper.

MANCHESTER'S EXPLOITS.

Probably there are more racy tales extant of Manchester's exploits on the primrose path than any young man of his age in England. The men who know him best say that he actually had sown a large portion of his "wild oats" before he was 18 under the careful direction of his father. No one, they say, ever has tried to restrain him, and he began a trip around the world at 18, in the course of which he went a pace which made the older men dizzy. His critics are unkind enough to say that he is a rake, and always will be one. His friends insist, however, that, having seen the world and its pomp and vanities, he is tired of them and really is settling down and becoming an ornament to society.

Often lately it has been reported that Manchester was engaged to marry a woman whose fortune might repair his own, such as Miss Pauline Astor, William Waldorf Astor's daughter; Miss May Goelet, daughter of the late Ogden Goelet; Miss Joan Wilson, daughter of a brother of the Wilson, of Tranbycroft—of baccarat fame or infamy. And always these rumors have been promptly denied by the young women.

But it was not always riches that the young duke yearned to marry. He paid court to Miss Ethel Barrymore and to Miss Gertrude Elliot, sister of Nat Goodwin's wife. Early in 1899 Cleo de Merode had a narrow escape from becoming the duchess of Manchester. The young duke was introduced to Cleo in Paris, and forthwith became madly infatuated with her. Among other jewels he presented her with a bracelet containing a large Burmah ruby, surrounded by costly diamonds. He got the jewels of Guy et Fils, Rue de la Paix, who opened a credit account for him with $3,000 for this little memento. Presently the duke offered to marry Cleo, who bashfully accepted him, and he forthwith went off to the Mairie of the arrondissement where Cleo lives to arrange the formalities of the ceremony.

His name got whispered about and the rumors of his intention reached the British embassy, with the result that his mother, the Duchess Consuelo, hurried to Paris and promptly knocked the whole scheme on the head.

CONSPIRACY CHARGED.

Rev. Alexander Costelli Says His Enemies Tried to Drive Him Out of Town.

Columbus, Nov. 21.—The troubles of the police department seem to have no ending. Serious charges were preferred against Detective Frank Wolf by Rev. Alexander Costelli, priest at St. John's church, which includes the Italian residents of Columbus.

Father Costelli claims Wolf was in a conspiracy to get him out of town. The reverend gentleman says Wolf went to Bishop Moeller and showed to the bishop what he said was a warrant for the arrest of Costelli, the warrant alleging forgery. Costelli says that Wolf told the bishop to advise Costelli to leave town and there would be no prosecution.

Father Costelli further alleges that he faced Wolf in the presence of Sergeant Kelly and accused him, as stated above, and that Wolf admitted that he (Wolf) had visited the bishop.

Father Costelli has had some trouble with his pastorate, an effort having been made to secure his removal. At that time he was at Mt. Clemens, Mich., but came home on receipt of Bishop Moeller's letter, advising him of the detective's action. Inquiry was made of Inspector of Police Evans, who promised to look up the matter, but who, it seems, never did. The clergyman presented the charges to Chief Tyler, who was surprised at them. Investigation at the police court showed that no warrant was ever issued against Rev. Costelli, and Clerk Fraas could not remember of an application for one.

Father Costelli said that he did not care to push the matter against Wolf, but insisted that he should know the names of the persons who were behind the affair, and offered to let it drop if Wolf would give him the information which he sought. Wolf declined to do this, and Sergeant Detective Kelly suggested that the priest bring the matter before Chief Tyler upon the latter resuming his duties.

KENNEDY'S WOODEN LEGS.

They Did Not Prevent the Wearer From Winning Pretty Marion Day.

Cleveland, Nov. 21.—A pair of wooden legs did not stand in the way of Earl Kennedy winning the heart and hand of pretty Marion Day, who ran away from home to marry her crippled lover. Marion Day is the only daughter of Arthur Day, of Sunset avenue, foreman of the Riverside factory. She is 19 years old, and strikingly pretty. About two months ago her twelve-year-old brother was injured and was taken to St. Alexis hospital.

During his illness Marion visited him every day. In the same ward with Marion's brother lay Earl Kennedy. He had lost both legs about four years ago by being run over by a freight train, and because of a slight injury to one of his "stubs" was in the hospital. He saw Marion Day on her daily visits to her little brother and they fell in love.

Last Monday the girl left home secretly and the couple were married. The father has now located them in Youngstown. The girl's father is heartbroken, while her grandmother seems to be most shocked by the fact that Kennedy is minus both legs.

RECEIVER TUCKER SUES THE BROWNS.

Newport Defaulter Stole Exactly $193,668.78.

THE WOMEN IN THE CASE.

They Are Still in Cincinnati But One of Them Denies Her Identity—Miss "Lillian Russell" Said.

Cincinnati, Nov. 21.—The exact amount of defaulter Frank M. Brown's shortage of $193,668.78 is $193,668.78. Of this $193,668.78 represents the amount taken through the false entry system. There was $2,200 taken on two notes signed by Brown and endorsed by his brother Tom. There were two of these notes and both were dated in October of last year.

Receiver Tucker has filed three separate suits against Frank Brown for the above amounts. Two of the suits on the notes make Thomas C. Brown defendant with Frank M. One suit is on a promissory note of the date of October 8, 1900, payable in 30 days. The amount called for is $1,000. The other is on a note for $1,200, dated October 13, 1900, and payable in 60 days. This note will not be due until December 15. The suits carry with them the attachment of all the property of Frank and Tom Brown, and of money in the hands of Thomas H. Collins.

Mr. Tucker has retained C. J. & W. W. Helm as attorneys, and the suits were filed in the circuit court by them late in the afternoon.

The story that "Lillian Russell," one of the girls on whom Brown is supposed to have lavished his money, had left town is absolutely unfounded. Lillian has only changed her place of residence from one flat to another flat. With her went her white maid, her colored maid and the colored man servant, all of whom are part of the household of the Lillian's household equipment.

It will be remembered that Lillian lived in a flat at 408 Smith street. It was a handsomely furnished apartment. A visit to this flat early yesterday morning disclosed the fact that it had been dismantled, and the natural inference was that the fair Lillian had flown and was to join Brown in his exile. But this theory proved to be altogether wrong. Miss Lillian simply had her household goods moved to another flat on Fourteenth street.

News of the move of the fair Lillian, tracked the household goods to the new place of residence, but failed to find Miss Russell, that is they thought they had failed. Miss Lillian met all callers at the stairs and denied her identity.

"Miss Russell is not here," she would say. "I don't know where she is. I am only a friend of hers, and the furniture in the flat belongs to me. Miss Russell has gone. I do not know where she has gone, but I wouldn't tell you if I did know. You may be assured of one thing, though, and that is that you will not find her here. I think she has gone to California. Yes, she may have gone to join Frank Brown, for I know that she loves him devotedly and would go to the end of the earth for him."

She was also a very shrewd and cunning woman. She repeated it time and again and succeeded in convincing most of her visitors that she was telling the truth and that Miss Russell and she were not one and the same person.

Lillian is a very dramatic young woman, and also a very shrewd and cunning woman. She has seen enough of the world to be a good judge of human nature, and her appearance does not bear out the statement made by Marian Smith that she is a "dope" fiend.

For three hours she kept up the deception and assuring the reporters that she was not Lillian Russell, and that is the reason that she was not announced that she had skipped out.

"But you are Lillian Russell, aren't you?" asked one of the callers.

"Lillian Russell?" she answered with dramatic emphasis. "I? No, indeed, I am not Lillian Russell."

This latter remark was addressed to the colored maid who dutifully denied her mistress' identity.

Then Lillian amused herself descending on her own and Frank Brown's virtues and assuring the reporters that "Miss Lillian is a true woman, who is true to Frank Brown and who loves him."

Marian Smith, wife of Elmer or Wilbur Smith, whatever his name really is, still denies most strenuously that she was involved with Brown. Mrs. Smith's name, by the way, is Bertha Muck and she is well known about town as a woman with a past. She is too well acquainted with the ways of the world to get excited over the present case and her denial of the stories that are floating about are as strong as any were at first, with the exception that she now acknowledges having received some "trifling" presents from Brown "with my husband's consent."

In regard to the stories told by the Russell woman, she enters a general denial. She said last night that the Russell woman was beneath her notice, and that she had never spoken to her in her life.

"She doesn't know anything about me. I believe that I did hear that she was jealous of me because Frank Brown took me to the theater a few times, but I didn't pay much attention to that. I never threatened the Russell woman at all. I would not do such a thing. I am not the kind of woman to engage in quarrels with people like her."

The story that I went to the train with Frank Brown when he left town is absolutely false. I saw him here at the house when he called to see Mr. Smith. I knew that he was going away. I have never received money from Brown.

"He asked my husband some time ago if he might make me a present, and upon getting consent gave me a ring worth about $40. He also bought me a rocking chair and a few pictures, but their value is trifling. The story that he furnished me with a trunk. Most of the furniture is still unpaid for. I have the bills to show it—bills from installment houses, on which only partial payment has been made. I am wholly innocent in this affair. Frank Brown did not spend his money on me. I don't know where he is."

Mrs. Smith also went on to say that she had never gone to the races with Brown alone, and that she had never come from the race track with him. She said that she often saw him there as she saw other men.
